DUTIES SUMMARY

Independently conducts a variety of difficult to highly complex enforcement activities for the prevention and detection of violations of the Hawaii State Disability Compensation laws, rules and regulations as a primary work assignment and performs other duties as required; or supervises and participates in performing enforcement assignments for the prevention and detection of violations to the Hawaii State Disability Compensation laws, rules and regulations; and performs other duties as required.

Disability Compensation Enforcement Specialist IV: Includes the following types:

(A) A fully experienced independent enforcement specialist whose assignments predominantly encompass highly complex and difficult enforcement/investigation/compliance problems. Cases are characterized by a predominance of the following factors: (a) lack of precedents, guidelines or policy for conduct of the investigation or interpretation and application of the laws to situations not directly covered; (b) need for considerable skill in persuading employers to accept liability and voluntarily agree to retribute to employees affected by discovered violations and agree to future compliance; (c) need for extensive evaluation and analysis of facts uncovered to determine creditability of facts and evidence as when there are conflicts among statements of parties involved and/or with documentary evidence or lack of conclusive evidence; (d) strong hostility expressed in contradictions in statements, flat denials, unwillingness to cooperate in providing information or records; suspected deliberate evasion of enforcement efforts (e.g., continual relocation, refusal to supply business records for examination or suspected falsification or alleged lack of records and other subterfuges); (e) continual willful violations of laws, rules and regulations; discovered or suspected violations of other laws, rules and regulations than those three for which the enforcement specialist initiated the investigation.

A position typically works under the general supervision of a higher-level disability compensation enforcement specialist or program manager. Specialists at this level are expected to independently resolve difficult investigative problems or compliance situations encountered but are expected to identify situations which may be precedent-setting relative to the interpretation and application of policy or the law. In these situations, they identify the problem and recommend to the supervisor appropriate handling of the case or need for obtaining legal opinions or litigation.

(B) A working supervisor who participates and performs disability compensation enforcement work. Positions in this category have responsibility for the continued and regular supervision of an assigned unit of specialists. The work involves planning, assigning, reviewing and coordinating their work; providing technical supervision and guidance to subordinate staff; participating in budget preparation and program planning; and reviewing and recommending revisions to operating methods and guidelines. A position of this type works under the general supervision of a higher-level supervising disability compensation enforcement specialist. Work is performed independently within general procedural and administrative guidelines and decisions are not questioned for technical adequacy but reviewed for overall conformance with program policies and legal guidelines.
